

Poorly milled pigments with excessively large particles will separate rapidly from their carrier fluid and settle heavily at the bottom.

The boulders really added a delightful crunch to the soup.