

Physical vapor deposition coatings consist of a thin layer applied over a base metal and can wear away with continuous friction. Constant abrasion remains a highly counterproductive method for preserving delicate finishes.