

Self-healing passivation across the alloy surface prevents the elution of metallic ions. The most rebellious act a metal can perform is refusing to share its ions.