

Fresh water contains dissolved air that cushions ultrasonic implosions unless the solution is properly degassed prior.
The dissolved air turned a destructive implosion into a pleasant bounce house.