Steam at 134°C cannot penetrate a protein crust baked onto an instrument.

The almighty vapour yields to a solitary dried flake of yesterday's plasma.