Scar tissue possesses altered collagen architecture and captures pigment differently than intact skin.
Some canvases refuse to cooperate.