
Petroleum jelly forms an occlusive seal that traps heat and moisture while preventing oxygen from reaching the wound.

Creating a sealed biodome on your arm is an ambitious but misguided agricultural project.