

Ultraviolet radiation rapidly degrades and fades fresh tattoo pigment before it can settle into the skin.
The local star will happily steal the contrast right off your body.