

Nontuberculous mycobacterial infections are commonly seen in grey areas of a tattoo when black ink is diluted with unsterile water.
Harvesting local storm clouds lacks laboratory precision.