

Tattooing bypasses the main physical barrier against pathogens by inserting ink below the epidermis. The fortress gates were heavily guarded but the delivery elevator was left wide open.