
Manufacturers sometimes fail to validate that their chosen sterilization methods actually eliminate all microorganisms from the finished ink.

Waving a magic wand over the shipping crates has proven completely ineffective at eliminating microscopic hitchhikers.