

Decisions made under intense social pressure at corporate networking events dramatically increase the likelihood of future regret.

The synergistic atmosphere fades long before the ink finally settles.